While the post-disaster needs assessment presented at the New York conference attested to the capacity of the United Nations system to act promptly in a coordinated manner, the Group also witnessed close collaboration among international organizations in the humanitarian cluster system, with each cluster led by a part of the United Nations system or, in the case of the shelter and non-food items cluster, by the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, and in the case of the camp coordination and camp management cluster, by the International Organization for Migration. However, the Group noted the need for increased interaction and collaboration among clusters.
